Download the UBot Studio 5.9.50 + Compiler V2 - CRACKED - $999 Crack.Q: multiple-instance, single-library Makefile for programming in C I have a programming problem, most of it is contained in this question. I understand how to do a multi-instance, multiple-library Makefile, but it would be very inefficient to do the same thing for a single-library project. For this question: if a Makefile included code from multiple source files, and multiple library files, how could I make it work? I've got this simple example GitHub-Test-1.c: hello.c gcc -g -Wall -c hello.c -o $(BUILD) gcc -g -Wall -c main.c -o $(BUILD) -L $(BUILD) LIB = main.o hello.o $(BUILD): $(LIB) gcc -o $@ $^ A: The idea is to have separate sources for the object files and the libraries. And in that case, the trick is to create a dummy target main, which depends on all the other objects. But you do not want to do that. You want one single object containing all the code in the library. After that, all you want is to do link all the.o files into one object. That is why you should not create a main.o
